Tax day presentation

If you earn $50,000, then you will pay $6,250 in federal income taxes.

Your marginal tax rate is 25%. You paid $250 income tax on the last $1,000 you earned.

If you had earned $60,000, then your federal income tax would be $8,750. The feds take 25% of the next $10,000, or $2,500.

Your average tax rate is 12.5%. Your first $8,500 taxable income is taxed at a 10% rate. The next $26,000 is taxed at a 15% rate.

The next tax bracket is 28% at $83,600 taxable income. The rate is 33% at $174,400.

Not all of your income is subject to the federal income tax

For the 2011 tax year there is a $3,700 personal exemption and a $5,800 standard deduction.

If your income was below $9,500 you would pay no income tax.

You also will pay the Social Security and Medicare tax. For 2011 this is 5.65% of earnings up to $106,800 (usually it is 7.65%).

So if your salary is $50,000 your after-tax take home pay will be $40,925 after subtracting $6,250 in income tax and $2,825 in SSI and Medicare taxes.

If you work in California, then you also will pay the state income tax. In 2010, this is $2,485 on $50,000 income.

So if you earn $50,000, then your take home pay will be $38,440.

The California income tax also is progressive. The marginal tax rate at $50,000 income is 9.3%.

If you get a raise of $10,000, then together the feds and the state will take 39.95%,* or $3,995.

* 25% federal income tax, 5.65% SSI and Medicare, 9.3% state income tax.

If your adjusted gross income (“AGI”) is less than $60,000, then you can deduct up to $2,500 in student loan interest you pay.

You can’t deduct principal.

The deduction is phased out starting at $60,000 AGI. It disappears at $75,000 AGI.

The value of the deduction is a function of your marginal rate. At a 25% marginal rate you save $25 federal income taxes with a $100 deduction. You also save $9.30 in state income taxes.

You may deduct unreimbursed moving expenses so long as the job you take is more than 50 miles from your current home.

You cannot deduct the cost of the bar exam and bar review. If this is reimbursed by your employer it is taxable income.

You may deduct student loan interest and moving expenses without itemizing, meaning these are on top of the standard deduction.

State income tax is an itemized deduction.

If you are married, then you may file a joint return or you may file as married individuals filing separately.

For federal income tax purposes, a couple with two income earners generally will pay a bit less tax filing jointly if they earn significantly different amounts.

If one earns $50,000 and the other $30,000, then they will pay $600 more in taxes if they file separate returns.

If one earns $120,000 and the other earns $50,000, then they will pay $1,092 more in taxes if they file separate returns.

If they stay single and file separate returns, then they split the difference, paying $360 less than would filing as separate married and $700 more than as joint married.

If they each earn $50,000, then there is no difference.

A married couple filing separately may not deduct interest paid on student loans!
