Berkeley Law students will overview their work on regarding law and policy research on continuous healthcare coverage and on accountable care organizations. Join us for lunch!

The passage of the Accountable Care Act has sharpened the conversation on the possibility of better and more efficient health care delivery and finance in the United States. Berkeley CHEFS has been working on several projects related to ACA implementation in California -- one involving studying continuous health care insurance as the possible key to improved health care outcomes and the other involving health care delivery and finance redesign as the possible key to reigning in health care costs.
