Stanley Lubman is Lecturer in Residence at the School of Law of the University of California, Berkeley. He has specialized on China as a scholar and as a practicing lawyer for more than 45 years. He has an A.B. degree with honors in history from Columbia College and LL.B., LL.M., and J.S.D. degrees from the Columbia Law School. He trained as a China specialist in the United States and in Hong Kong for four years (1963-1967) under grants from the Rockefeller Foundation, Columbia University, and the Foreign Area Fellowship Program.

After five years as a member of the Berkeley faculty (1967-1972), he combined a career as a scholar and as a practicing lawyer for 25 years. He taught at a number of American and European law schools while advising Western and Japanese clients on a wide range of matters in China. From 1978-1997 he headed the China practices at two major San Francisco law firms and a large English firm of solicitors. Since 1997 he has devoted his time to scholarly research, teaching, and consulting at the Asia Foundation on law reform projects in China. He returned to Berkeley in 2002.

His writings on Chinese law and related subjects have been widely published and include China's Legal Reforms (Lubman, ed., Oxford University Press, 1996); Bird in a Cage: Legal Reform in China after Mao (Stanford University Press, 2000); and Engaging the Law in China: State, Society, and Possibilities for Justice (co-edited with Neil J. Diamant and Kevin O'Brien, Stanford University Press, 2005).
