Introduction

This course will introduce you to a variety of approaches to negotiations, improve your negotiation skills, and help you reflect on your own negotiation style.

The structure of this course emphasizes both theoretical and experiential learning. Since negotiation is something you learn by doing, we will engage in hands-on negotiation simulations throughout the course. These simulations are designed to enhance your skills, demonstrate concepts, and provide you with opportunities to experiment with various negotiation techniques. In addition, we will discuss theories of negotiation and use them to analyze the simulated negotiations. As a result, we will move back and forth between theory and practice, applying lessons from theory to our negotiation practice, and drawing lessons from our experience to critique theory.

We will examine a variety of contexts and problems that create a need for negotiation and raise questions about what it means to negotiate well. We will explore a systematic approach to negotiation that we think constitutes good advice about what to do when your interests or beliefs are in tension with others' and you cannot act unilaterally. We will also situate this model in a broader field of intellectual inquiry and discuss its special implications for lawyers.

At a general level, we will move from negotiations that involve fewer factors to ones that are more complex. By the end of the course, however, we hope that you will appreciate the layered complexity that was involved in what at first appeared to be simple negotiations.

Assignments and Evaluation of Learning

Participation. You are expected to participate productively in class discussions. Productive participation means that you contribute to class discussions – that you neither dominate nor stay silent (to the extent possible in a class of this size) – and your participation will determine 40% of your grade.

Throughout the course, you will participate in role-playing negotiation exercises. You will be assigned a role, partnered with one or more other students, given a case with instructions and confidential information, and asked to prepare and negotiate. When cases are handed out ahead of time, you should come to class thoroughly prepared to negotiate, which will take approximately 30 – 60 minutes, depending on the particular simulation. Anything less than careful preparation will negatively impact your learning and that of your negotiation partner. Ill preparation will also impact your participation grade.

As a general rule, you should try to do as well for yourself as you can in these exercises. As you will see, measuring success can be problematic, and therefore you will not be graded directly on the outcomes. In many of the exercises, you will receive confidential information. You may reveal as much or as little of this information as you wish in the negotiation. Under no circumstances should you show another party your confidential information before or during a negotiation. Other negotiators must believe you, not a piece of paper. This rule reflects that character of actual negotiation, since there is seldom an external authority that can exert the influence that your instructions do. It would be a rare case where you could convince someone about a preference or a constraint simply by showing them a piece of paper.

It's not hard to defeat the purpose of these exercises. You can consult others who have played an exercise, deviate from the rules, or collude with your counterpart against the game. However, such practices are self-defeating. They undercut the richness of experience, deaden discussion, and distort outcomes. Since you are not being directly graded on the outcomes of these cases but rather on the learning that you derive from them, we trust that you will avoid these practices.

Attendance. Because the format of the class will center on classroom discussion and participation in negotiation simulations, full attendance is required. Since many of the simulations will be conducted in pairs or small groups, your absence – even for an hour – would not only affect your own learning but also that of your classmates. Please note that this class takes place over the course of four full Saturdays. If you anticipate any conflicts during those weekends, please do not sign up for this class.

Papers. You will be required to work throughout the semester on a project involving a personal negotiation. We will ask you to identify an issue in your life (professional or personal) to be negotiated. This can be a current negotiation you are involved in (e.g. negotiating with a firm over your salary), an issue you'd like to address (e.g. changing housework responsibilities with a partner or roommate), or a negotiation experiment (e.g. negotiating with car dealers for a new or used car). The purpose is to integrate our in-class learning with a real-life situation. You will be required to hand in a preparation paper for this negotiation, as well as a short paper (4-8 pages) reviewing the results. The preparation and review papers will determine 30% of your grade.

Final Project. You will be asked to negotiate a final role play with your classmates. The negotiation will be videotaped, and you will meet with the professor afterwards to review your performance. The purpose is to put your learning into practice, both for conducting the negotiation and reviewing it. You will not be expected to be a “perfect” negotiator, as if such a thing existed, but you will be expected to be able to identify your own strengths and areas for improvement. Your review session will comprise 30% of your grade.

Schedule of Classes

1. Saturday, January 12th

INTRODUCTION TO NEGOTIATION. What is a “negotiation?” What are the common dynamics? How can you predict and control those dynamics? We will begin our course with an examination of negotiating patterns and assumptions. Then we will introduce a framework for interest-based negotiation. Using this model, we will discuss how to measure success and prepare systematically for a negotiation.
