The International Law Society (ILS) provides a forum for students and faculty with an interest in international law to meet and exchange ideas and seeks to generate interest in the field of international law by inviting debate, encouraging research, and sponsoring periodic symposia and speakers. Bali and Beyond: International Agreements on Climate Change, presented by Alice Thomas will explore international agreements on climate change after the 2007 United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC) in Bali, Indonesia.

Alice Thomas is a staff attorney with the International Program at Earthjustice, a national public interest environmental law firm. Earthjustice's International Program works with environmental and community groups from other countries to hold polluters and governments responsible for environmental harm, to promote the human right to a healthy environment, and to create strong tools for citizens to protect natural resources and the environment.

Prior to joining Earthjustice, Alice served as Deputy Director of the American Bar Association's Asia Law Initiative, where she managed rule of law and environmental good governance programs in Cambodia, China, Indonesia, Philippines, Thailand, and Vietnam. From 2000-2001, Alice served as ABA's environmental law liaison in Uzbekistan, and from 2001-2003, she worked in Bosnia-Herzegovina training government officials, non-governmental organizations, and the media on freedom of information and government accountability. She is a 1988 graduate of Princeton University and received her JD from the University of Wisconsin Law School at Madison in 1993.
