

Understanding Mexican and US Domestic Worker Movements

What determines whether informal worker movements succeed or fail?

Chris Tilly explores the evolution of domestic worker movements in Mexico and the United States, building on literature of social movements and intersectionality. Tilly examines how different relationships to power, resources, and dimensions of identity shape the two movements, and illustrates the challenges facing informal workers organizing for social justice.

Wednesday,
February 6
4 - 6 pm

2521 Channing Way
Reception to follow

ABOUT THE SPEAKER

CHRIS TILLY is a professor of urban planning at the University of California, Los Angeles. He formerly served as Chair of the Board at Grassroots International, and editor of Dollars and Sense, a popular economics magazine. His research has involved issues of community development, labor and employment.

DISCUSSANTS

CATHERINE FISK
UCB SCHOOL OF LAW

LESLIE SALZINGER
UCB SOCIOLOGY

RSVP: irle.berkeley.edu/events

The Latinx Research Center

An Interdisciplinary and TransAmericas Research Hub
University of California, Berkeley

Center for Latin American Studies
University of California, Berkeley

BerkeleyLaw
UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA

Center for the Study of Law & Society

Berkeley
SOCIOLOGY

