Project: Responsibility Sharing for Refugees and Qualitative Methods in Migration and Refugee Law Research

Elena Chachko is an academic fellow at the Miller Institute for Global Challenges and the Law and the inaugural Rappaport Fellow at Harvard Law School. Her work explores novel structural developments in national security and foreign relations practice through the lens of administrative law and theory. She studies the vital functions of bureaucracies both within and outside government in this new policy landscape. Her current projects consider the relationship between government and tech platforms around security and geopolitics, emerging models for cybersecurity governance, and the application of international factors in domestic regulation. Elena is working with Miller Institute co-director Professor Katerina Linos on responsibility sharing for refugees and qualitative methods in migration and refugee law research.

Elena's scholarship has been published or is forthcoming in the California Law Review, the Georgetown Law Journal, the Stanford Technology Law Review, the Yale Journal of International Law, and the American Journal of International Law Unbound, among other publications. Her work has won several awards, including the 2020 Mike Lewis Prize for national security law scholarship, the Harvard Law School Irving Oberman constitutional law writing prize, and the Harvard Law School Mancini writing prize. Elena previously held fellowships at the University of Pennsylvania's Perry World House, the Harvard Kennedy School's Belfer Center, and the Harvard Weatherhead Center. She will receive her JSD from Harvard Law School in 2022.
