

Miller Fellow: Gunn Jiravuttipong

Faculty Sponsor: Professor Katerina Linos

Project: The Limits of Antitrust

Gunn is a first-year student in the JSD Program at UC Berkeley Law. His research focus is on the diffusion process of digital economy regulations into developing countries, especially in digital competition law. Moreover, his studies aim to explore the experiences of developing countries as they interact with other powerful states, digital platforms, and international organizations, all while navigating constraints on resources and administrative capacity in the development of their digital economy regulations.

Gunn holds an LL.B. from Thammasat University, Thailand, and an LL.M. from Berkeley Law School. Prior to joining the J.S.D. program at Berkeley Law, Gunn worked as a Researcher at the Thailand Development Research Institute (TDRI), a think tank based in Thailand that conducts policy research across various areas. His research experience focuses on various legal and policy topics, such as competition law, data protection, platform economy regulations, access to justice, and legal aid.

For his Miller Fellowship, Gunn is working with Professor Katerina Linos on the limits of antitrust, investigating to what extent antitrust laws work, or fail to work, around the world.
