

Miller Fellow: Maya Prakash

Faculty Sponsor: Professor Katerina Linos

Project: Borderlines Podcast, European Union Court of Justice Profiles

Maya is a 2nd year law student at the University of California Berkeley Law School. She has background in international relations from her undergraduate degree at the University of Southern California and from her masters degree at Johns Hopkins School of Advanced International Studies (SAIS). At SAIS, Maya was the Editor-in-Chief of the SAIS Observer, the school newspaper that published foreign policy op-eds. Now at Berkeley, Maya is the Editor-in-Chief of the Berkeley Journal of International Law (BJIL), a leading journal of international law in the United States. In summer 2024, Maya worked as a litigation fellow at Haki Na Sheria in Nairobi, where she conducted legal research on vetting practices and identity card registration in Kenya for a civil suit, and as an intern at the ALN Academy, where she published work on the AfCFTA and African rule of law to promote nuanced dialogue amongst legal practitioners and law students.

As a Miller Fellow, Maya is assisting Professor Katerina Linos with researching and editing episodes of the ground-breaking Borderlines CJEU podcast series featuring interviews with the Judges and Advocates General of the European Union Court of Justice.
